THE IMPACT OF INTERNATIONAL MIGRATION ON RECEIVING COUNTRIES: THE CASE OF THE NETHERLANDS

Rinus Penninx
Jeannette Schouw
Carlo van Praag

NIDI

Report no. 37
The Hague, 1994
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface ........................................................................................................... v

Introduction .................................................................................................... 1

PART I: Immigration and immigrant populations in the Netherlands .......... 5
  1. Introduction: the Netherlands as an immigration country .................... 7

  2. International migration: current trends and patterns .............................. 17
      2.1. Size and composition of the immigrant population ....................... 17
           2.1.1. Size ........................................................................ 17
           2.1.2. Composition ............................................................ 23
           2.1.3. Geographical distribution ........................................... 32
      2.2. Immigration ........................................................................... 33
           2.2.1. Policies .................................................................... 33
           2.2.2. Size and composition .................................................. 36
      2.3. Emigration ............................................................................. 47
           2.3.1. Policies ..................................................................... 47
           2.3.2. Size and composition .................................................. 50

  3. The demographic impact of immigration ................................................. 61
      3.1. Nuptiality ............................................................................. 61
      3.2. Fertility ................................................................................. 66
      3.3. Mortality ............................................................................... 82
      3.4. Changes of nationality ............................................................. 84
           3.4.1. Naturalisation policies .................................................. 84
           3.4.2. Size and composition .................................................. 86
      3.5. Population change ..................................................................... 90
A framework for analysis

4.2. The development of social-scientific research on immigrants

4.3. An analytical framework: concepts and definitions

4.3.1. The social versus the ethno-cultural position

4.3.2. Minority-group formation versus emancipation

4.3.3. Acquired versus allocated positions

4.3.4. Levels of analysis and a heuristic model

5. The social position of immigrants

5.1. Introduction

5.2. Labour, income and social security

5.2.1. Unemployment, employment and sources of income

5.2.2. The position of those in employment

5.2.3. Analysis of the labour-market situation of immigrants

5.3. Immigrants and education

5.3.1. The level of education of adults

5.3.2. Education of immigrant children

5.3.3. Analysis and interpretation of findings

5.4. Housing

5.4.1. Housing as an issue in government policy

5.4.2. Minorities and their housing history

5.4.3. Minorities and their housing situation

5.4.4. Housing policy

5.4.5. Concentration and segregation

6. The ethno-cultural position of immigrants

6.1. Introduction

6.2. General governmental and institutional policies

6.2.1. Policies before 1980

6.2.2. Policies after 1980

6.3. Political mobilization against immigrants

6.4. Mass media and collective images of immigrants

6.5. Attitudes of individual Dutch people

6.6. Immigrant organizations

6.7. Political mobilization of immigrants

6.8. Attitudes and orientations of individual immigrants

6.9. Later-ethnic relations in residential areas